Afghan Massacre tells of the horrific forced journey undertaken by thousands of prisoners who surrendered to America's Afghan allies - under guarantee their lives would be spared -after the siege of Kunduz, in Northern Afghanistan.

Prisoners in Afghanistan

Bundled into containers, 200-300 at a time, the lucky ones were shot within minutes. The rest suffered an appalling road trip lasting up to four days, clawing at the skin of their fellow prisoners as they licked perspiration and even drank blood from open wounds. Up to 3,000 now lie buried in a mass grave, but this was not a simple matter of Afghans killing Afghans.

Afghan Massacre tells of how American Special Forces took command and control of the operation, re-directed the containers carrying the living and dead into the desert and stood by as survivors were shot and buried. And it details how the Pentagon lied to the world in order to cover up its role in the greatest atrocity of the entire Afghan War. This is the documentary many in the US administration would rather you did not see.

Afghan Massacre was produced over ten months in extremely dangerous circumstances: eyewitnesses were threatened and two were subsequently killed; the film crew were forced into hiding and our researcher was savagely beaten to within an inch of his life. He was recently awarded the Rory Peck Award and The SONY International Award for his bravery. The film has been nominated for numerous awards worldwide.
